CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTIONS

This chapter consists of conclusion and suggestions, the writer concludes based on the findings and interpretation and gives some suggestions to the reader.

A. Conclusion

Based on the findings and discussion, the writer concludes as follows:

1. Compounding refers to the combination of two or more words to create a new meaning. Thus, analyzing the process of compounding to create a new word might help in expanding the vocabulary when learning a foreign language, particularly in English. It completely confirms the three types of compound words identified in Maudy Ayunda's post on Instagram. These types include compound adjectives, compound noun, and compound verbs. Compound adjectives are formed through noun-adjective, adjective-adjective, and preposition-adjective, compound nouns are formed through noun-noun, verb-noun, adjective-noun, and preposition-noun. Compound verbs are formed through verb-verb, noun-verb, adjective-verb, and preposition-verb.

2. The writer identifies compound words based on McCarthy (2018: 61) theory. The writer finds 49 words which are classified into 25 words as headed compound, 24 words as headless compound, and three types of compound words, with detail 3 compound adjectives such as heartwarming, one-sided, and wholesome. 43 compound nouns for instance booklist, milestone, weekend, insight, necklace, and hair mask. Then, 3 compound verbs includes overlook, self-publish, and intimate. Another example is provided in data findings. Based on explanation above, the type of compound word which is more dominates is compound noun.

B. Suggestions

Based on the conclusion above, the writer gives several suggestions to the readers:

1. For Students

   The results of the study can increase knowledge about vocabulary of students who want to learn compound words and the types of compound words that may occur in the learning process or everyday language. Through this research, the writer hope that readers know and understand the types of compound words

2. For the Lecturer

   This research is intended as a guide in teaching compound words and to increase knowledge about teaching Morphology and Linguistics.

3. For the Next Researchers

   This research for researchers majoring in English education and other students who are interested in related research, they will discuss compound words more deeply. There are several things that can be learned, the writer suggests to the next researcher to analyze compound words not only on Instagram but also on other social media such as X or Twitter, Facebook or Thread, etc.
